While the Scottish Highlands are famous for their FORESTED BEAUTY, in the olden days of epic battle, they weren't really known for their hospitable living conditions. Have you seen Braveheart? Enough said. Yes, the Highlands were a last resort for the Scottish, but today there is the GLEN AFFRIC ESTATE. Think of it as a bucket list destination for the impossible to impress. You'll be the hunter, not the hunted, at this revamped Victorian estate set atop a rocky knoll overlooking Loch Affric in the middle of a 10,000-acre nature reserve. And since it's brought to you by the owners of slice-of-heaven Eden Rock in St. Barths, it's not exactly lacking in the LUXE department. But here, instead of tanning and rosé, it's all about deer hunting between serious sessions of WHISKY TASTING.

Restored to a level of glory that you've come to expect from the owners of Villa Rockstar, Glen Affric Estate's eight-bedroom LODGE and three additional cabins are a HIDDEN RESPITE in the wilderness. The estate – rentable only as a whole – is the ultimate spot for an all-out adventure-slash-hunting getaway with your entourage. Think game shooting, trout fishing, scull racing, windsurfing, and gorging on juicy venison by the light of a roaring fire. Start gathering your troops because it's time to run for the HIGHLAND HILLS.
