Easter Island

Moai Statues

1,234 Miles from... Anything

Just a man, his thoughts, and some wild horses. Sounds like the opening scene of a made-for-TV romantic drama. Also sounds a lot like EASTER ISLAND. A tiny dot in the South Pacific, Rapa Nui, as it's known to the locals, has a CULTURE and MYSTERY all its own.

This is a BUCKET LIST trip in that it's about as REMOTE as you can get. It belongs to Chile, but it's 1,243 miles away from the nearest inhabited place. The upside (that is, if you don't consider extreme remoteness a plus) is that you won't have to give up your creature comforts to visit. Explora Rapa Nui, the premier ECO-ADVENTURE excursion company, has your back when it comes to luxury, so you can experience the famous MOAI MONOLITHIC STATUES by day and three-course gourmet tasting menus and pisco sours by night. You'll certainly need sustenance to traverse this uncultivated land, from Birdman Crater to the quarry where wild horses roam free. Back at the lodge after all that strenuous sightseeing, you'll relish OCEAN VIEWS from every room. Go ahead – fall into a bed that'll bring on the soundest sleep imaginable. Then, happily rise with the sun to do it all over again.

There's something special about visiting a place that's remained virtually UNCHANGED for the past 200 years. Especially with the added bonus of high-thread-count sheets.

Cocktail Chatter

Archaeologists theorize that Easter Island's moai statues were transported with wooden sleds and log rollers, explaining how the once verdant island became barren due to deforestation.
